PUBLIC WORKSHOP

BORN EQUAL? A GLOBAL RESPONSIBILITY

New Hall of the Synod, Vatican City
25-26 June 2018

Presentation

The conference will be centered on the perspective of “Global Bioethics.”

An ethics of the person and of persons that is also, necessarily, an ethics of responsibility for the environment in which human beings live and that they will deliver to future generations. “The human being is a creature of this world” – writes Pope Francis in Laudato si' – and for this “we are not able to overlook consideration of the effects of environmental degradation, of the current model of development and of the culture of waste of the life of people.”

Poverty and inequality with respect to social determinants for health, as well as access to health care, produce serious and sometimes irreparable consequences for people's lives. Pope Francis, in his Message to the participants in the European Regional Meeting of the World Medical Association on the "end of life questions", organized together with the Pontifical Academy for Life and held at the Vatican on 16 and 17 November 2017, underlined, together with the risks of 'therapeutic obstinacy, the existence of' a so-called systemic tendency to the increase in therapeutic inequality', which is 'clearly visible at global level', but also within the richer countries. In the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development of the United Nations, the third objective indicated is "to ensure health and well-being for all and for all ages" and to open the list of goals to be achieved there is a reduction in mortality maternal and that of infants and children up to 5 years, who continue to dig a deep furrow of inequality and injustice between rich and poor. To contribute to the achievement of these goals, in terms of scientific reflection and research and the promotion of concrete initiatives, is one of the forms of witness and commitment to the protection of life that is born.
